MODULE E · OVERVIEW

Module Overview

One of the most important skills of a successful counselor is the ability to handle objections confidently and professionally.

Parents do not raise objections because they are not interested. In most cases, objections indicate that the parent wants more clarity before making a decision. A skilled counselor understands the concern, addresses it with confidence, and helps the parent see the value of the program.

“ Our goal is not to argue with parents or push them into a decision. We focus on understanding their concerns and providing the right information that helps them make an informed choice for their child. ”
